

To whom it may concern,

I am a final year student in Trinity College Dublin, studying Law and Business. I am interested in becoming a lawyer to allow me the opportunity help people access legal recourse to solve their problems.

I am keen to achieve a position with Byrne Wallace due to its unparalleled reputation in financial services law, which is an area of the law I have been exposed to in both my law and business studies. In particular, I am interested in the M&A and private equity space, and helping clients in those areas with the financial transactions they are conducting.

Learning to apply the skills that I have developed in both my course and past employment is a focus for me for any position that I may obtain.

Several of the attributes that I would bring to any workplace are my work ethic and research skills.

I have demonstrated my work ethic by academic achievement, including obtaining a 5-year Scholarship (Schols) in Trinity, based on an open exam and requiring 1st class honors. I have achieved a first in course exams to date. In addition, I have worked during available holidays over the past years.

I have worked for a Trade and Customs consultancy, where I focused on legal and market research associated with Government Policy associated with Brexit.

My research skills have progressed during my time as a law student. I have spent time developing my understanding of legal theories and their application. I have been involved in Mooting and have written a Market Paper on the Turkish Lira.

I would be very interested in any opportunities that you may and I look forward to hearing from you.

Yours Sincerely,

Michael Ryan
