Dear Sir/Madam,

Law, being the dynamic, pervading instrument that it is, occupied my career interests throughout my entire schooling. An innate legal interest served to inform the professional path I sought to take. In keeping with that, I endeavour to gain experience in this field to further my expertise and realise my passion for a career in law. I am extremely enthused by the possibility of a traineeship, and I have a wealth of practical knowledge accumulated through differing employment during the last 6 years.

Having acquiesced in sectors stemming from the catering industry, to solicitors offices, to retail, I have accumulated uncountable skills, and have gained invaluable knowledge. Throughout my roles I have displayed an unwavering ability to adapt, learn, and understand the behaviours and goals of a company, and most importantly, the needs of clients. I concern myself with a company's passion and endeavour to fulfil my position to the upmost. I take pride in my work, and reap satisfaction from effective and accurate workmanship. I am a highly communicative individual, I work well as part of a team, I am creative and I also revel in the opportunity to solve a problem.

Byrne Wallace is sure to operate at a fast-pace which is a circumstance I am akin to. With departments covering all significant areas of Irish law, my practical experience gained working in differing legal environments would coincide well with a firm possessing such expertise. Furtherly, the partner-led approach of the firm corresponds with the experience I have gained in Beauchamps working closely with partners in an open-plan environment.

Thank you for taking the time to read my application, please consider me for this traineeship.

Yours sincerely,

Emily Deering.
