

October 2017

To whom it may concern,

I am a law graduate working in financial services, looking to return to the legal sector and wish to be considered for the position of Trainee Solicitor.

I have worked in a number of legal firms, both mid and top-tier. I have experience working with partners and associates in diverse areas such as healthcare, media, litigation, family, probate, and banking and financial services. My experience has familiarised me with the workings of the courts service and working with other firms on the progression of cases.

Over the past two years I have worked in Ireland's growing international funds industry in regulation and compliance. This experience has given me a superior understanding of the regulations and compliance obligations underpinning the industry.

Within financial services I have demonstrated an ability to manage large scale projects, work in tandem with management to implement them and advise management on large regulations. I believe that the skills and knowledge from working in this area are transferable and would be an asset in my future legal career.

I currently have passed four FE1s and am confident of completing my final four in time to begin Blackhall in September 2018.

Since I began to study law during my undergraduate, I have been passionate about pursuing a career as a solicitor. I believe I am suitably qualified for the position of Trainee and my knowledge is an asset for the firm.

I have attached a copy of my CV outlining my relevant experience. I have full academic and career references which are available on request or at interview.

Sincerely,

Nathan Wheeler
